

I am writing to object to proposed changes to a way an individual can purchase investments.

I am starting to feel like I live in a dictatorship rather than a country with freedom of choice. I object to government, big brother, securities commission of whatever you want to call it telling me what I can and can't do with my own money!

Are the securities commission just worried about people not buying mutual funds and putting money into other peoples pockets (ie. Management Expense Rations) or do they really have a concern for the individual?

Keep you hands off my money and let me mind my business.

Chris Swann
Self Directed RRSP holder