

Attention John Stevenson and Honorable Iris Evans,

In regards to the CSA proposing changes in securities policy about providing detailed financial information before I can invest in a particular investment.

I would like to voice my opinion that I am opposed to implementing this change.

Being obligated to expose my detailed financial position as well then have someone decide on my behalf whether an investment is allowed for myself to invest within is not acceptable.

I do however agree, and have had to do this in investment I have participated in, that any investment I must acknowledge that the risk level is high and could lose some or all of my investment.

This will protect the company who sells any higher risk investment and that they have openly stated the risk of their investment.

In conclusion, I believe investors are responsible for their own investment decision as long as investment companies adhere to stating the risk associated.

Regards
Robert Bartsch