

Mr. Stevenson

I would like to add my voice to those who strongly object to more information and outside control on investments. It would seem to me that the undercover bottom line is to keep the investor in a straight jacket to invest in either banks or low performing mutual funds. Other investments that pay higher returns with higher risk may upset the monopoly the banks and funds now maintain. I would like to be free to invest as I see fit. After all, who earned the money I want to invest anyway?

Andrew Scotter